A Fall of Leaves
by
Philip Lancaster

This small collection of new poems by Philip Lancaster is in preparation for publication in June 2014, in a limited, fine press edition of 120 copies.

A loose thread runs through the collection, exploring the place and work of the creative artist; the need, and sometimes the inability, to create and to convey thoughts and ideas . . .

*. . . exhaling
bright speech through thick wild word-wood of iron gall . . .*

(‘Relic of Hope’)

*Worlds and ideas awake,
sparkling like fire in the senses,
fuelled by coal etched words
burned finely into the page;
refined embers of the maker’s first notion,
untangled from the wood of thoughts,
set down and bound as precious
growth rings of civilisation.*

(‘Books’)

The publication of the collection is being made possible by subscription. To pre-order your copy, please send your contact details and payment (£15 per copy) to the author at the address below. The book will be sent immediately upon publication.
